

Please leave the states to manage their own affairs. We don't feel sorry for any company that says its livelihood is being threatened by Wisconsin's do-not-call law because it is perceived as too restrictive. Aside from simply wanting to be left alone in our own homes, it must be remembered that it is we, the consumers, who pay for the telephone access to and from our homes, and we should have some control over who calls us. We pay for the phone for our convenience and possible protection, not for the livelihood of some business we don't know or care about. Also, this law helps family members protect their elderly and other at-risk relations from scammers and other predatory telemarketers.

So what if it puts these telemarketers out of business? The economy and society put any number or types of businesses out of commission at any given time, so why should these whiners get special consideration?

(Please note that I had also faxed a comment because I had not been able to find this part of the FCC website.)
